

This leaflet is designed to explain how the SEND Information, Advice and Support Service could help you. The term 'school' is used to include both pre-school and school age establishments.

What is the SEND Information, Advice and Support Service?

The SEND Information, Advice and Support Service is:

- A service that supports all parents/carers of a child with SEND
- An impartial, confidential, arms-length, free and accessible service
- Available for young people to access independently from their parents

What can the Service help with?

- Special Educational Needs (SEN) - if you are concerned about your child's progress or your child has been identified as having SEN, we can offer information and support on what this may involve
- Non-Curriculum Issues – get support with any school issue not related to the curriculum. This may include issues such as bullying, exclusions, admissions or school policy
- The Local Offer – find out what support groups and activities are available local to you
- Personalisation and personal budgets – get help with how to choose the right support for your family
- Education law – find out the education laws on SEN and related law on disability, health and social care
- Elective Home Education - if you are considering taking full responsibility for your child's education and educating them at home yourself, we can offer information and guidance on responsibilities of home educators and discuss all options with you.

Other support available

Schools, parents and carers can contact us for further information on:

- Setting up a parent support group
- Information on conferences/seminars on a range of educational needs in the area
- Advice and information on running sessions about SEND and non-curriculum issues.
